

Beta Reading Report - Belonging and Healing by Dave A. Cornelius

Disclaimer: This feedback report is just a constructive criticism based on what I have noticed as a beta reader after reviewing the manuscript. The remarks provided are not harmful or personal to offend the individuals. No comments should hurt the writer's feelings about their work.

Feedback

- Forewords by Ervin (Earl) Cobb, Cherie Silas, and Alicia McLain are great and according to the theme of the book.
- You did a terrific job of drawing readers in by beginning the book with an introduction and the setting of a pandemic.
- It's fantastic that you approach the readers directly because your writing style is conversational as I mentioned in the previous feedback as well.
- Altogether, I loved reading the book, particularly because it is relevant to the self-help niche and provides excellent advice on how to heal yourself in various yet proven methods.
- I enjoyed how the book was divided into sections, each of which has a major headline and subheading with its own subject.
- The use of main points and explanations for each subject is another element I adored.
- The readability of the manuscript is excellent. It's simple to read and comprehend your book.
- According to the book's category, the language and vocabulary used are appropriate and adequate.
- Voice and tone were well set from the first and kept throughout.
- I loved the ending of the book that you concluded with conversations. However, I have a suggestion for you to give it a title of the conclusion instead of the epilogue. An epilogue extends the story, not something separate from it. Since they are part of a story, epilogues are most common in fiction. The nonfiction genre mostly has a 'conclusion' section.